Joseph's Coat of Many Colours

Joseph felt very happy as he walked across the fields. He stopped for a moment, held out his arms and spun round and round so that his coloured coat swirled in the air like a beautiful rainbow.

The coat was a gift from his father and it made him feel very special. In the distance, he could see his brothers in their drab, brown coats as they looked after the sheep. He knew that he looked very handsome and he laughed out loud.

“What do you want?” said Judah, as he approached, “Have you come to spy on us?”

“Father sent me to see if you need any help,” said Joseph. Joseph's brothers formed a circle around him, they were all a lot bigger than him.

“A likely story!” shouted Reuben, “Here we are working outside all day in the hot sun while you laze about at home. You can't do much work in a fancy coat like that.”

They began to push him around and before long, Joseph fell to the ground and his beautiful coat was splashed with mud.

“I've got a good idea,” said Dan, “let's put him in that well.” And although he tried to struggle, they easily dragged Joseph across the field, ripped his coat off him and lowered him into the well. Joseph looked up at the steep sides and at the patch of blue sky way above his head.

“How special do you feel now?” shouted Asher. The sound of his voice echoed around the well. Then everything went quiet, no one answered Joseph's cries for help. He was trapped!

Blue is . . .

Blue is the sky,
On a sunny Summer day,
A blue boat,
Bobbing on the blue, blue, sea,
Blue is the sound of a violin,
A cold, icy, Winter's day,
A trickling stream,
As it trips over stones,
Blue is my favourite paint,
Dad's new car,
My best blue jeans,
I LOVE BLUE!
